Peacemaking
Personality and Mediation

Martin C Euwema
Are you a peacemaker?

“To be effective as a peacemaker, one has to be in peace with oneself”

What is peacemaking?

Mediation as a mindful approach of conflict

Personality, conflict and mediation
Are you a peacemaker?

Peacemaking is an informal activity aimed at prevention, de-escalation and resolution of conflicts.

Peacemakers do not have a formal role or task to assist in conflicts.

Peacemaking is “extra role behavior”.
Peacemaking consists of four types of responses to conflict

1. Staying impartial, not taking sides
2. Emotional support to the conflicting parties
3. Create a positive atmosphere through humor
4. Process support to the conflicting parties
Peacemaking Profile

Bar chart showing the ratings for various categories:
- Process support: Series 1: 3, Series 2: 3.5
- Emotional support: Series 1: 3.5, Series 2: 3.5
- Impartiality: Series 1: 4.5, Series 2: 5
- Humor: Series 1: 2.5, Series 2: 2.5
The mindful mediator

Mindfulness is as an openhearted, moment-to-moment, non-judgmental awareness, or being aware of the present moment with an attitude of curiosity, openness and acceptance.

This is the attitude and presence of a mediator.

Developing mindfulness contributes to the effectiveness of the mediator.

Personality and the mediator

Personality has a relation with
- the involvement in conflicts (conflict prone)
- Conflict stress
- Conflict behaviors
- Third party attitude and behavior

It is the clash of personalities that create the conflict. And your personality will predict your openness in the conflict, your perception, willingness to listen, ..?

(Sandy, Boardman, & Deutsch, 2006).
Personality, conflict and mediation

- Extraversion
- Agreeableness
- Conscientiousness
- Emotional stability
- Openness

Females vs. Males
Summary

• Peacemaking is essential for a healthy society
• Peacemaking can be stimulated and trained
• Mediators have to be mindful in the mediation process
• Knowing yourself and understanding personality of others is essential for peacemaking
The story of a true Peacemaker.

A must read!